SHARE PRICE PERFORMANCE SINCE LAUNCH ON 1 DECEMBER 1999

— WS Ruffer Equity & General C acc — IA Flexible Investment Sector

This has been a difficult period when the momentum-driven (most commonly tech) stocks keep performing, while undervalued equities have often been getting cheaper. We stick to our knitting: we intensely look for asymmetric returns, focusing on ‘value’. This means we need to have ‘the capacity to suffer’.

This concept came from Jean-Marie Eveillard and Tom Russo, two legendary investors. When asked what the most desired quality was in a person to be hired, Eveillard said it was the ‘capacity to suffer’. For example, ‘capacity to suffer’ was about buying Kraft, Johnson & Johnson, Philip Morris, Walmart in 2006-2007 when markets were roaring higher. They were inexpensive but considered to be ‘boring’ stocks; the common question was, what is the catalyst for owning them? The stocks did very little for a few years until they doubled to reach our estimate of their intrinsic value.

The ‘capacity to suffer’ was about owning Exxon when the business was struggling before the pandemic at $60/share, seeing the stock halve during covid, staying with the company until it gradually started improving with the stock recently at $120, and still inexpensive. It was about buying Titan Cement at €18/share, keep buying to €10 or so during covid, being close to management, educating them on the power of buybacks and travelling with the stock until it reflected Titan’s intrinsic value.

‘Capacity to suffer’ is about being consistent and focusing on ‘value’ during a long period when ‘growth’ has been so popular. It is about having cash and hedges in a rising market.

It is about buying Reckitt Benckiser (RKT) now. RKT is a solid, cash generative business which consists of a collection of strong brands such as Durex, Stepsils, Nurofen, Woolite, and Dettol. Reckitt used to be a darling of the stock market for many years. The acquisition of Mead Johnson was a bad decision in early 2017. Baby formula is a rather different business to RKT’s core units of hygiene and health. During the last few years, Reckitt’s management has changed a few times, execution has been lacklustre and the stock de-rated to a modest valuation. Further, in March, potential litigation liabilities severely affected RKT’s share price. They involve the US unit of the former Mead Johnson, now a small part of the group. Even though many consider Reckitt currently uninvestable, in our view, the stock is characterised by asymmetric risk reward in the long term. It is probable that after many years of disappointments that either the new management team and importantly the well-respected new Chair will create shareholder value, or corporate activity will take place.

One of the characteristics we often look for in the management teams we back is for them to have the ‘capacity to suffer’. In May we initiated a position in RS Group. Simon Pryce who has recently become the CEO, is investing for the long term as he is rebuilding RS, a cash generative, growth cyclical. We back Mr Pryce, a seasoned leader, to create value for shareholders over time. Investing is a marathon, not a sprint. Our journey during the last 17 years has been about investing in a measured, well-balanced manner: we are ‘tortoise-like’, in essence aiming to preserve and steadily enhance our investors’ capital, always aiming for risk-adjusted returns in building and managing our portfolio of intensely researched equities.
